AlternativeTo is a free service that helps you find better alternatives to the products you love and hate. The site is made by Ola and Markus in Sweden, with a lot of help from our friends and colleagues in Italy, Finland, USA, Colombia, Philippines, France and contributors from all over the world. That's right, all the lists of alternatives are crowd-sourced, and that's what makes the data powerful and relevant.Genetic determinants of skin aging. Sagging skin and wrinkling are common phenomena of aging. Aging skin is a result of excessive production of matrix metalloproteinases (MMPs), decreased procollagen synthesis, and impaired wound repair. A number of genetic and environmental factors contribute to the development of skin aging such as intrinsic genetic factors and environmental factors. Recently, many genes have been found related to the development of intrinsic aging, and each of the genes have their own unique functions in the pathogenesis of intrinsic aging. In addition, clarifying the mechanism of action and function of environmental factors is necessary for developing a better strategy for prevention and/or treatment of skin aging.A switchback valet parking area carved into a hill at Griffith Park in Los Angeles has been a controversial feature of the famed park for nearly a century, until New York's High Line rescued the concept in 2007. The two-acre switchback, nicknamed "The Curve," is a steeply curving piece of parkland that makes its way along a steep hillside, with one set of stairs connecting it with the park's main entrance. Even though the California State Parks system owns the land, and instituted a maintenance contract with the Olmstead Brothers Inc. company in 1910, a judge ruled in April that the switchback could not be altered or closed, according to the Los Angeles Times. The developers filed a motion requesting a new trial, saying that the design is meant to stimulate auto traffic on the park's lower side of the hill, but the judge ruled against the developers, and the curve continues to attract autophobes. For its part, while the motion is being considered, the park service began a plan to start some maintenance, according to LAist. The switchback was first opened up for use as a parking lot in 1913, according to Park Service

I was trying to make a simple error reporting system for all my API stuff. I'm struggling to find the best way to do it. What I'm currently doing is have an abstract class like: public abstract class MyApiError { public int ErrorCode {get; set;} public string Message {get; set;} } And then I have a whole bunch of other classes that inherit from this one and override the error codes (names changed for cleanliness). This seems really heavy handed and not DRY. Is there a better way to do this? I would have thought something like this would work: public class MyApiError { public bool IsError {get; set;} } Then in my API logic I can just return MyApiError.IsError for 'OK' responses and MyApiError.IsError = false for error responses. A: IMHO: You can have something like that as property in base class: public abstract class A { public abstract bool IsError { get; } public bool IsError { get { return this.IsError; } } public void DoStuff() { //... if (IsError) throw new Exception(); //... } } public class B : A { public override bool IsError { get { return false; } } } public class C : A { public override bool IsError { get { return true

System Requirements:

OS: Windows XP or Windows Vista (32-bit) Processor: 1 GHz (XP), 2 GHz (Vista) RAM: 1 GB Hard Disk Space: 6.4 GB Sound Card: DirectX-compatible sound card DirectX: DirectX 9.0c Network: Broadband Internet connection Additional Notes: You can install both versions of the game for comparison, or you can install the demo version and play it while the full version is downloading. I have found that the demo version is a little difficult
